A DETECTIVE STORY BY FRED M. WHITE.

Author of "The Crimson Blind," "The Corner House," Etc.

(Copyright, 1907, T. J. McBride & Son.)

CHAPTER XXIII. The Next Move.

"Well, and what is it now?" Ravenspur asked. "You look as if you had seen a ghost. Is there anything new in this ghastly business? Have the police solved the problem?"

"On the contrary, the problem gets more bewildering every hour," Walter said. "As you know, I was going to talk over our side of the puzzle with Inspector Dallas, and he gave me some startling information. As soon as ever I mentioned the Flavio business he told me that he had made a disdovery which connected it closely with the death of poor Louis Delahay. It appears that there is in England at the present moment an Italian detective, called Bertl, who had the Flavio affair in hand."

"I recollect the name perfectly well," Ravenspur murmured. "It appears that Berti has seen Mrs. Delahay since the inquest. He was rather interested in the affair and he contrived to get a sight of Mrs. Delahay. And now comes the most extraordinary feature of the story. Berti is absolutely certain that Mrs. Delahay is no other than Carlotta, Countess Flavio."

"Impossible," Ravenspur cried. "The man is mistaken."

"He is prepared to swear to his statement, any way," Walter said. "And, after all, I don't see why it should be impossible. In fact it is not in the least impossible, and I'll tell you why. After this amazing thing came out I thought it my duty to go back to the hotel and see Mrs. told her what Berti said, and taxed her with being a principal in the Flavio tragedy."

"And she denied it promptly, of course?"
"She did. She told me quite calmly that she had never heard of the Flavio affair. I confess her words staggered me, because they were so calm and self-possessed. I watched her narrowly when I was speaking, and she never so much as changed color. Even when I told her the story she appeared to be as mystified and puzzled as ever. She said, as she has always said, that for the best part of her life she has been more or less a recluse and altogether out of touch with the world's happenings. You see, Bertl was so confident and Mrs Delahay so self-possessed that I was utterly puzzled."
"There is nothing to be puzzled about,"

Ravenspur said. "The Italian detective has made a mistake. His recollections of Carlotta Flavio's features after eighteen years have become blurred. For goodness sake, don't let us harp upon this absurdity. Surely there are enough complications without "So I thought at first," Walter said. "But you will recollect telling me the story of your friend Count Flavio and his unhappy marriage. There were two Descartis-Carlotta, who married your friend, and Maria, who disappeared and was not heard of for years. Now isn't it rather significant, bearing in mind what Berti says, that Mrs. Delahay's name should be Maria?" Ravenspur looked up with a startled ex-"Well, yes," he exclaimed. "But I see you have more to tell me. Will you please go on?" "I am coming to the interesting part now," Walter said. "Though I was prepared to believe that Mrs. Delahay knew nothing of the Flavlo affair, I was by no means satisfied. I felt that there must be something in the Italian's story. I was ered at the state fair, among whom state certain of it when Mrs. Delahay admitted committee members were numerous that her maiden name was Descarti. Oh, please let me finish. It was Mrs. Delahay's sister Carlotta who was the wife of your friend the count. Hence the very natural mistake made by Berti. He had not seen the countess, but her sister. The come out before."

"But why should it, my dear uncle? You say that you never saw Count Flavio's wife. You have not the slightest idea what she was like. All you know is that she was an exceedingly bad woman, and that you rescued her child from a questionable future. On the other hand, Maria Delahay is secluded from the world for eighteen years. She is told by her parents that her sister is dead. She knows nothing of the terrible Flavio scandal. This is a fact, because she told me so herself. Indeed, we had it all out. She has to come back to the world again when her parents die. Sh is compelled to get her own living. It is only natural that she should change name, and there you are." Lord Ravenspur pondered over the mat-"You saw a great deal more of the Dela-hays than I did," he said. "Practically I have not seen them together at all. Now how do they strike you? I mean, before their marriage, did you think that the woman really cared anything for our poor "I am sure she did," Walter said emphatically. "Of course, there was no passionate attachment between them; they were too old for that. But I am quite cer-tain that Maria Delahay's affection was sincere enough. After what I have seen the last day or two, I decline to believe that she had anything to do with her hus-band's death. I believed her when she said she never saw him from the time she let the hotel till she found him dead in the

"And that opens up another theory," Ravenspur exclaimed. "If it wasn't Maria Delahay the witness Stevens saw that night in Fitzjohn Square, then it must have been "My word, that never occurred to me!" Walter cried. "And yet the solution is as simple as it is probable. I wonder if it is possible to obtain a photograph of the countess?" "There were plenty of them published at the time of the trial," Ravenspur said. "Of course, I mean in the illustrated papers. I have got the whole of them somewhere upstairs. Not that I pay much attention to newspaper photographs, as they are rarely any use. I'll go and see if I can find one." Ravenspur turned hurriedly and left the room. He was gone some considerable time, leaving Walter to stand there and ponder over the result of his night's adventure. The more he thought the matter over the more complicated it became. He put the thing away from him almost petu-lantly. He was suddenly conscious of the fact that the music in the drawing room was very soft and soothing. Then it flashed across him that Vera had something to say. Ravenspur might be a little longer, and there was no opportunity like the present.

Only a portion of the drawing room lights were on, together with the piano candles, and Vera sat there half in the shadow, a pathetic-looking figure enough, in her white dress. As Walter approached he could see hat her face was very pale and that her eyes showed signs of recent tears.

"What is the matter?" he asked. "What fresh trouble is this?" Vera's hands fell away from the keys She rose from her seat. "It is not altogether a fresh trouble," she more acute. Do you remember my telling you the other day that I felt how impossible it is for me to remain here any longer? But I must go away."

"My dearest girl, why?" Walter asked. You know perfectly well how much I care for you. You know perfectly well that you could not look me in the face and declare that you do not love me as well as I love you. Now, could you?" you. Now, could you?"
"That is what makes it all the harder," murmured; "it is only the old one become

Vera whispered. "Oh, I am not going to prevaricate about it. We have always been good friends, Walter, and in the last few given way to a more tender attachment. Perhaps it was that which opened my eyes. Perhaps it was that that made me ask myself some questions. I felt quite sure that Lord Ravenspur had guessed nothing of our secret. In fact, it was a secret to me till one afternoon in this very room • •" "I am not likely to forget," Walter said tenderly.
"Well, then, you see I began to think.

No father could have been kinder to me than Lord Ravenspur. I owe him a debt me good enough for his nephew, the future holder of the title. And when he did find out not long ago, I saw at once what a dreadful disappointment it was to him."

"I am afraid it was," Walter said grudgingly "But he did not set his face against it when I placed the thing before him in a proper light. He merely stipulated that our engagement must be a secret between us for the present. I am sure he is much too just a man, much too kind hearted to Vera; your sense of honor is too high."

The girl's lips quivered piteously.

"Perhaps I am." she whispered. "But there is another thing which I have learned tonight, a thing which prevents me from remaining bers as householders. from remaining here an hour longer than is necessary. It is the question of my birth, I learned that tonight for the first time. Oh, do not humillate me any further. Do not force me to speak any more plainly. If you knew the shameful transfer for the first time. you knew the shameful story of my parents you would realize at once how unfitted I am to become-The girl said no more. She covered her face with her hands and burst into tears. As to Walter, he was too astonished to As to water, he was too assumed the speak. In the tense silence that followed the hall bell rang violently again and again. Vera looked up swiftly.

"You had better go yourself," she said.

"It may be important. (She was deeply grateful for the interruption.) Go yourself; everybody else is in bed."

Husband Divorced Also Loses Custody of Child. WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., October 5 .-

Supreme Court Justice Isaac N. Mills yesterday granted a divorce to Mrs. Edith

Miller of Ardsley-on-the-Hudson from her husband, Hugh Miller, son of George W. Miller and brother of Andrew Miller, clubman and steward of the Jockey Club. At the adjournment of the divorce trial Tuesday it was stated that Mr. Miller would present an affidavit showing that he was unable through the loss of his place with the New York Life Insurance place with the New York Life Insurance Company to pay his wife $125 alimony. Mr. Miller of his counsel did not appear before Justice Mills in opposition to the application of Col. As Bird Gardiner, uncle of Mrs. Miller, to make the order for the decree final. Col. Gardiner, in addition to a request for alimony, asked that costs be granted against Mr. Miller and the co-respondent, Miss Carlotta Knopf, daughter of August Knopf, a wealthy leather merchant of Manhattan. Justice Mills directed that Mr. Miller pay his wife $100 a month alimony; that has appointed Luther W. Mott of Oswego to be superintendent of banks to succeed Charles Hallam Keep, who resigned to become a member of the up-state public serve ice commission. Luther Wright Mott was born in 1874 in Oswego. He was graduated at Harvard in 1896, and after spending a year in newspaper work entered the First National Bank of Oswego, of which he is now vice president and cashler. He is a trustee of the Oswego City Savings Bank. Mr. Mott is also a director of the Syracuse Trust Company and the Auburn Trust Company and the Steam Carriage Boiler Company of Oswego, and president of the Oswego Paper Box Company. He was president of the municipal civil commission of Oswego in 1903, and president of the Oswego Chamber of Commerce in 1905.

Mott of 'Oswego.

ALBANY, N. Y., October 5 .- Gov. Hughes

Mr. Mott was warmly indorsed by bankeers and business men of standing. SENATOR KNOX DENOUNCED.

Rev. Dr. Frye Says He Was Friend and Supporter of Mormonism. PITTSBURG, October 5 .- United States Senator Philander Chase Knox of this city was bitterly denounced last night by the Rev. Dr. William Frye of Trenton, N. J., at the anniversary celebration of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Christ Church.
The Rev. Mr. Frye spoke at length on the question of Mormonism and declared that Senator Knox is the greatest friend and supporter of Mormonism in public life. He called attention to the fact that Senator Knox was the principal supporter of Senator Reed Smoot and said that Knox and Smoot had used government envelopes in which to send out literature supporting Mormonism. He also also called attention to the fact that Montana, in which state there are thousands of Mormons, was the first state in the Union to indorse the candidacy of Knox for President. The address created a tremendous sensa-tion, coming as it did in the home of Knox, and delivered to an audience made up of the fashionable social set of Pittsburg, in which Senator Knox and his family move.
